

Which of these study tips will you try this afternoon?

1. Set up your home study space

Libraries and communal spaces are less available, so make sure your home study space is set up well. It should be organised so you can easily find everything you need. Good lighting also helps.

2. Get rid of distractions when writing

While you're typing up an assignment or essay, avoid distractions. Turn off your phone - one "ding" can ruin a train of thought, and put you in a deep dive to procrastination.

3. Create, and follow, a schedule

Create a study schedule - allocate time in your day/week for study and decide what you'll study when, based on upcoming assignments, exams or workload.

4. Motivate yourself & your friends

Start a group chat or weekly catchup for a subject you're all taking. Share your struggles and tips, keep each other on track and finally have somewhere to post all those maths memes.

5. Ask for help when you need it

Getting stuck or struggling with a concept is a normal part of learning - but don't give up! Your teachers, friends, and parents could help - or you have friendly subject specialists available anytime, through your school's Studiosity service.

6. Organise your notes early

Spend 15 minutes per day making notes on one syllabus dot point, for each subject. You'll save so much time you can use to do assessment tasks, learn your notes and have more time to relax.

Remember, you've got real, expert help with Studiosity available online, whenever you need it, thanks to your school.
